

Brad Bulkley

Brad Bulkley founded Bulkley Capital, L.P., a nationwide middle market investment banking and financial advisory firm (Dallas, Chicago Atlanta, and Baltimore), and has more than 30 years of experience in corporate finance. Bulkley Capital primarily assists companies execute growth strategies. He began his career at Harris Trust and Savings Bank in Chicago, where he was a commercial lender to middle-market companies in the Midwest. He then formed and managed one of the largest communications lending divisions in the country at what is now Bank of America.

In addition, Brad has been a director or advisory board member of several privately held companies. He currently is an Independent Director of Calamos Asset Management Company ("CLMS") in the Chicago area, which manages over $25 billion in capital. He is a member of and certified by the National Association of Corporate Directors ("NACD") and also serves as a statutory board member to the North Texas NACD and chairs its Membership Committee. Additionally, he is a member of the Association for Corporate Growth. Brad has recently attended various Department of Defense programs and currently participates in BENS, Business Executives for National Security.

Brad received a Bachelor's degree from Trinity University in San Antonio, Texas, and an MBA in Finance from DePaul University, Chicago. Brad and his wife, Ann, live in Dallas, Texas.